EIGHT tips for using Twitter around health-related events

1. Remember, they're following YOU
   If you have 100 followers or a million, they need you because they know you're doing work in this space. Remember what you're bringing to the table. As a organizer, you're sharing knowledge and experience. Share your world by sharing your reactions and opinions openly. That’s what your followers want to hear.

2. Be their friend and eyes too
   For events physically present during an event, there are probably hundreds if not thousands of people. Participants looking for a new audience to engage with. Many of them would love to have the same opportunity. Try to stay consistent with what your audience expects and stake their interest in what you’re sharing. You might be more interested than usual, and if you are, you’re not the only one – and not only what you want to hear.

3. Use the event hashtag
   The people who use the same hashtag, the event will engage with another and share thoughts and ideas. Read out the information that organizers have shared for the event and use it – consistently.

4. Be original
   Your tweets will be valued most by your followers if they include something they could not easily obtain or had not anticipated. Be creative, share an interesting site or article, a relevant hashtag (rather than the event hashtag), a fellow user’s username. Don’t be the only one to post about an issue. Stay fresh.

5. No time like the present
   Tweet as soon as something grabs your attention or evokes a reaction. Impressions count as well as the information shared. Take some say to something you agree/disagree with, why or not, and why. Ask a follow-up question of your own. It’s hard to find the right moment to tweet, but consistency can be a good thing. How time Twitter's posts add depth and value to discussions.

6. Quote of the day
   If you post tweets directly, you don’t need to be particularly precise or original, and note them for what they say, not what they say. Include a quote of the day or username if you have time. Avoid repeating what the highest profile speakers say; they will be tweeted and reposted by everyone.

7. A picture, a thousand words etc.
   Use the image option to provide visual cues as you do for text content. Add value to your followers. When you can't get elsewhere, such as photos of presentations, slides, slides, videos or live tweets at the event, if you have seen for the first time at an event. Avoid photos of tweeting means and stage pictures.

8. Be a Twitter advocate
   Reminder other delegates that they need to tweet about the event. If someone tells you something interesting or important, encourage them to retweet about it. If they are not Twitter users, take a five minutes to tell them why they should consider joining Twitter and to show them to sign up and follow your team.
